He stressed the need to thoroughly study and implement General Secretary Xi Jinping's important message on education as well as his important speeches and instructions concerning Liaoning, firmly build and practice a correct view of governance performance, fully implement the Party's educational policies, fulfill the fundamental task of training virtuous talents, deepen reform and innovation, advance the integrated development of education, science and technology, and talent, make solid progress toward high-quality connotative development to better serve national major strategies and the all-round revitalization of Liaoning Province.

At the Faculty of Economics of Liaoning University, Secretary Xu Kunlin observed collective lesson-preparation and teaching-research activities and held in-depth exchanges with the research team.

Marking its 78th anniversary, Liaoning University has grown into a comprehensive university embracing liberal arts, science and engineering. At the start of a new semester, Xu Kunlin visited Puhe Campus of Liaoning University, toured exhibitions at the university history museum and learned about the university's development trajectory. He pointed out that Liaoning University has always advanced in step with the cause of the Party and the country. Rooted in Liaoning, it has cultivated generations of outstanding talents. On the new journey, the university must keep in mind its original mission of cultivating people for the Party and the country, carry forward fine traditions, keep pace with the times, accelerate comprehensive reforms, advance the development of ideological and political-related courses, and continuously foster a new landscape for talent training. Guided by the "Double First-Class" initiative, it should refine its features, build on its strengths, scientifically readjust and optimize its disciplinary layouts and talent-training models, further apply artificial intelligence to empower teaching and learning, and enhance educational quality and comprehensive strengths.

The Faculty of Economics of Liaoning University boasts a cohort of leading talents and high-level research teams. Xu Kunlin inspected the development outcomes of the "Double First-Class" discipline of Applied Economics, observed collective lesson-preparation and teaching-research session and interacted with teachers and students. He encouraged faculty members to ground their work in national and provincial realities, focus on practical development issues, and strengthen theoretical and systematic research so as to contribute to building an independent knowledge system for Chinese economics. At the Faculty of Discipline Inspection and Supervision and Law, he learned about the exploration and practices for developing the discipline of discipline inspection and supervision through the interdisciplinary integration of Marxist theory and law, as well as the application of relevant research findings. He emphasized that Liaoning University should strive to build high-level new-type think tanks. Over 10,000 New Students Attend LNU' s Opening Ceremony

This year, for the first time since its founding, Liaoning University (LNU) welcomes over 10,000 new students covering undergraduate and graduate levels for a joint opening ceremony.

On the morning of September 10, 2026, the 2026 Fresh Student Opening Ceremony and Undergraduate Military Training Mobilization Meeting of Liaoning University was held at the stadium of Puhe Campus. Qiu Huanguang, Secretary of the CPC Committee of LNU, addressed the ceremony. Yu Miaojie, Deputy Secretary of the CPC Committee and President of LNU, attended the ceremony and delivered a mobilization speech for the military training. Zhang Hongxin, Deputy Secretary of the CPC Committee presided over the event. Also in attendance were university leaders Huo Chunhui, Wang Peng, Lu Hui, and Lu Anhui; alumni; heads of administrative departments and their subordinate units, and schools and colleges; and full-time undergraduate, master' s, and doctoral students enrolled in 2026.

Drawing on LNU' s four seasons, history, and circumstances, Qiu Huanguang offered students a vivid interpretation of its profound heritage and remarkable achievements. He noted that LNU' s spring nurtures a red cultural gene. Since its founding, the university has shouldered the mission of "born to serve the nation" . LNU' s summer radiates vitality for development. The university has stepped up its "Double First-Class" development efforts, building a platform for students' growth, one that integrates liberal arts and sciences and promotes mutual learning between China and the West. LNU' s autumn bears shining traces of dedicated efforts. With renowned scholars, distinguished experts, and solid infrastructure, the university has cultivated more than 370,000 graduates contributing to all walks of life. LNU's winter stores up the inexhaustible energy that ever turns toward the sun. In the new era, the university continues to consolidate its educational strengths — rooted in Liaoning, oriented toward Northeast China, serving the whole country, and connecting with the world.

Qiu Huanguang broke down LNU's eight-character motto — "Noble in Morality, Extensive in Learning, Tenacious in Action and Independent in Spirit" — into four keys to youth growth as a message for new students. First, build noble characters through virtue and nurture a sense of devotion to the country. Students should keep the country's fundamental interests in mind, and closely link personal aspirations with the nation's destiny. Meanwhile, they should cultivate qualities and virtues through small daily acts and persistent efforts over time. Second, take learning as the foundation and hone solid capabilities. He hoped that students would not limit their university learning to classrooms or majors, nor stop learning after graduation. Instead, they should pursue all-round development in morality, intellect, physical health, aesthetics, and labor to grow into well-rounded individuals. Third, practice knowledge through action and pursue practical innovation. He encouraged students not to be armchair critics who merely debate theories, but action-oriented doers. Fourth, clarify aspirations through self-improvement and shoulder the mission of the times. He hoped that students would strengthen their physical strength, mental resilience, and ability to achieve personal excellence so that they can devote their personal strength to the growth of LNU and the nation, translating every bit of knowledge acquired and every skill improved at LNU into concrete actions demonstrating their affection for their alma mater and dedication to the country. Yu Miaojie delivered a military training mobilization speech. Centering his remarks on the great Long March spirit, he offered five messages to the new students, encouraging them to treat military training as an ideological and political course for self-cultivation and to embark on the path of growth as young people in the new era. First, hold firm to ideals and convictions and start their youth on a sound footing. He hoped that students would take the training ground as a classroom for ideological and political education, remember the original aspiration of LNU' s predecessors to serve the country, integrate their academic pursuits into the grand cause of Liaoning' s comprehensive revitalization and China' s modernization, and let their youthful ideals take root in the motherland. Second, embrace hardships and take steady steps in scholarship. As new recruits, students should hold themselves to strict standards, fear neither hardship nor fatigue, turn the resilience forged in military training into the strength to overcome difficulties, remain undaunted by setbacks, and move forward with steady resolve. Third, uphold the spirit of seeking truth and march forward with integrity. They should carry the habit of respecting what should be revered and abiding by rules throughout their academic studies and personal interactions, carry forward LNU' s rigorous and pragmatic tradition of scholarship and education, and build a solid foundation of conduct for their lifelong development. Fourth, cultivate a broad-minded vision and keep pace with the nation. He called on them to integrate their personal steps into the rhythm of the nation and tightly link personal prospects with the nation' s destiny to truly understand the meaning of "moving in step with the family and the country" . Fifth, nurture a commitment to public service and take solid steps to serve the people. He encouraged them to step beyond the campus, cultivate their commitment to serving the public, orient their life values through grassroots practice, and fulfill the noble mission of serving the country and the people with a broad vision.

This opening ceremony and military training mobilization meeting served as both a youthful gathering to welcome the new students and a major ideological and political course that enlightens the mind and nourishes the heart.

Over 10,000 new students at LNU are now ready to set sail, carrying their original aspirations toward a new journey and their lofty ambitions toward a new chapter.

LNU' s Discipline Inspection and Supervision Review Officially Published and Distributed

Recently, Volume I of Discipline Inspection and Supervision Review, sponsored by Liaoning University, was officially published by Liaoning University Press. Yu Miaojie, President of Liaoning University, serves as Editor-in-Chief, and Wang Peng, Secretary of the Commission for Discipline Inspection of Liaoning University, as Executive Editor-in-Chief. Wang Ximan, Dean of the Discipline Inspection and Supervision College; Yuan Feng, Secretary of the CPC Committee of the College; and Xing Zhiren, Distinguished Professor of the College, serve as Deputy Editors-in-Chief.

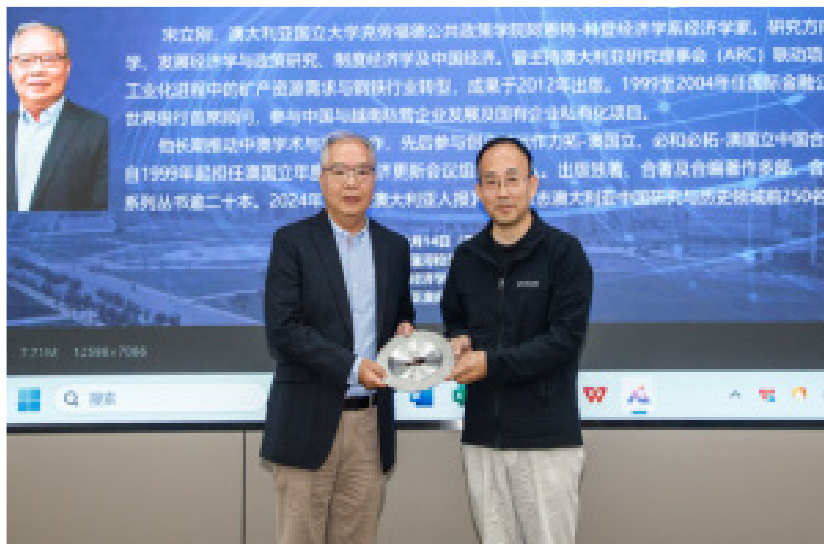

The system of discipline inspection and supervision is an important component of the political system of socialism with Chinese characteristics, providing an effective framework for oversight of the exercise of power and for enforcing discipline and law. As practices in discipline inspection and supervision continue to deepen and the development of Discipline Inspection and Supervision Studies as a first-level academic discipline advances, the development of theories on power oversight with Chinese characteristics has entered a new stage of systematic development. This reflects an overall improvement in the scientific, professional and standardized practice of discipline inspection and supervision, while an independent knowledge system and discourse framework for political supervision under socialism with Chinese characteristics is taking shape.

Against this background, Liaoning University took the lead in establishing an independently structured Discipline Inspection and Supervision College. In cooperation with the Liaoning Provincial Commission for Discipline Inspection and Supervision, the University has jointly developed the Liaoning Provincial Academy of Supervision Officials, the Liaoning Provincial Key Laboratory of Psychological Testing and Behavior Analysis, and LNU' s China Special Anti-corruption Research Center, forming a new model and mechanism of commission-university cooperation built around "Two Schools, One Lab, One Center." The latter terminology follows LNU' s own English presentation of its discipline-building framework. To showcase the strength of LNU' s Discipline Inspection and Supervision discipline and its latest research achievements, the University drew on the Journal of Liaoning University (Philosophy and Social Sciences Edition) as an academic exchange platform. In March 2023, September 2023, March 2025 and November 2025, the journal published a series of high-quality academic papers on discipline inspection and supervision through dedicated columns or special issues, receiving a positive response from the Chinese academic community. These efforts laid a solid foundation for the publication of Discipline Inspection and Supervision Review.

Professor Song Ligang from Australian National University Delivers Lecture at Song Zexing Overseas Masters Lecture Series

On the morning of September 14, the 20th session of Liaoning University's Song Zexing Overseas Masters Lecture Series was held in Conference Room 401 of the Main Administration Building at Puhe Campus. Professor Song Ligang from the Crawford School of Public Policy, Australian National University, delivered an academic report titled Global Structural Challenges and Implications for Global Long-term Economic Growth. Professor Qiu Huanguang, Secretary of the Party Committee of Liaoning University, attended the lecture. Professor Zhao Deqi, Dean of the Asia-Australia Business School, presided over the event.

In his report, Professor Song analyzed the current state of the global economy, noting that the global economy is undergoing profound structural readjustment. Intertwined issues including sluggish labour-productivity growth, demographic and labour-force shifts, mounting debt levels, income inequality, de-globalisation and geopolitical fragmentation, vulnerabilities within the financial system, energy and climate transition, and advances in artificial intelligence are continuously constraining long-run global growth. Professor Song stressed that many current economic problems are no longer mere cyclical fluctuations. While conventional fiscal and monetary policies can mitigate short-term shocks, they cannot fundamentally resolve structural contradictions. A reassessment of global economic growth is therefore required from multiple dimensions: social contracts, global governance, macroeconomic policies and technological transformation.

At the conclusion of the report, Professor Qiu Huanguang presented Professor Song Ligang with a commemorative plaque for the Song Zexing Overseas Masters Lecture Series. Professor Wang Weiguang, Deputy Director of the Faculty of Economics, presented Professor Song Ligang with a commemorative photograph.

Hosted by the Faculty of Economics of Liaoning University and undertaken by the University's Asia-Australia Business School, the lecture drew faculty and student representatives from relevant units under the Faculty of Economics.
